

Punitive damages against Texas-based ExxonMobil could be cut

7 Most Viewed Stories Associated Press - February 27, 2008 5:35 PM ET

South El Paso pedestrian crash involves police officer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The U.S. Supreme Court today seemed inclined to reduce the $2.5 billion award in punitive damages to victims of the 1989 Exxon Valdez disaster.

Wife of public corruption target fired from county job

Several justices indicated they think the amount approved by a federal appeals court is too high against Irving-based Exxon Mobil over the tanker oil spill off Alaska.

Justices questioned lawyers for the company and for the nearly 33,000 victims for 90 minutes, making only one passing reference to Exxon's record profits.

SWAT situation ends with discovery of two bodies

The award represents less than three weeks worth of Exxon profit, which was $11.7 billion in the last three months of 2007.

A decision from the high court is expected before summer.

The case is Exxon Shipping Co. v. Baker, 07-219.

'Welcome Home Heroes' parade sweeps through Downtown

Copyright 2008 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Serious crash reported in West El Paso

Air Force member accused of killing fellow airman

Semi-truck loses wheel, hits RV in opposite traffic

Texas Headlines More >>

News Minute: Here is the latest Texas news from The Associated Press

Attack on family shocks Texas community

American Airlines plane makes emergency landing at Glasgow airport

Hattiesburg police seize 50 pounds of cocaine

Walesa may cancel meetings in Mexico after pacemaker procedure

New Mexico Headlines More >>

APTRA Convention Has It All

Albuquerque attracts solar manufacturing plant

News Minute: Here is the latest New Mexico news from The Associated Press

Pew report rates best, worst governments

Old case sidelines lawsuit over Eddy County oil and gas audit

All content © Copyright 2002 - 2008 WorldNow and KVIA. All Rights Reserved. For more information on this site, please read our Privacy Policy and Terms of Service.